Real men don't cry

Real men don't cry.' 'You are not a girl; you can't cry.' I think every man have must hear these lines atleast once in their life all of which have led them to suppress their feelings. WHY??? I don't understandthe concept that men should not cry.

We live in a society where men are pictured as strong and powerful.

We are living in the age of feminism,yet as soon as a man breaks down, we don't spare a second before catcalling him womanish or unmanly.Living in a patriarchal society, our upbringing has taught us that since men have to protect their families,they have to be strong. This idea, if not directly, but in a subliminal way, has taught us that men have to bestrong and emotionless. Boys at a very tender age are taught to suppress their emotions.

Men do have emotions. Just because they aren't crying while watching Coco or sobbing after a breakupdoesn't mean they don't have feelings. It doesn't mean something is wrong with them. But it definitelymeans that a lot is wrong with society and the standards that are set for men. We as a society, are soobsessed with the idea of the alpha man that we forget crying is perfectly human and it has got nothing todo with gender.

To all the men out there, it's okay to cry. It's okay to share your tears with others. And it's okay to dowhatever it is you need to do for yourself.
